Why Credit Unions Matter in Our Community

Credit unions have always played an important role in helping local communities stay financially strong, and Community Connect Federal Credit Union is a great example of how that cooperative spirit works in real life. Unlike traditional banks, credit unions are not-for-profit financial institutions owned by their members. That simply means the people who have accounts at the credit union are also its owners, so the focus is always on serving members rather than outside shareholders.

Because of this member-owned structure, the benefits tend to go right back to the people who use the credit union. Instead of profits being sent elsewhere, earnings are often reinvested into things like better savings rates, lower loan rates, and improved services that help members reach their financial goals. Just as importantly, many decisions are made locally by people who understand the needs of the community and the people who live here.

Community Connect FCU has deep roots in the area. We were originally founded in 1956 to serve employees of Universal Cyclops Specialty Steel. Over time, we grew and expanded our mission, and today, Community Connect proudly serves individuals and families throughout Crawford, Venango, Forest, and Warren counties.

One of the best things about credit unions is the impact we have close to home. The money members deposit doesn't go off to a distant corporate headquarters: it stays right here in the community.

We encourage our members to refer their friends and family to Community Connect Federal Credit Union.

Community Connect Federal Credit Union members are encouraged to visit the credit union's website to learn more about recently increased share and share certificate rates.
